Here is a brief excerpt from the book:

John Decker sat in his office, staring at the photograph of the missing woman. Her name was Sarah Jones, and she was twenty-two years old. She had long, dark hair, brown eyes, and a kind smile. She had been missing for two weeks, and there was no trace of her.

John had been hired by Sarah's parents to find her. They were desperate for any news, and they had heard that John was the best in the business.

John took a deep breath and opened the file on Sarah's case. He began to read through the reports, but there was nothing that stood out. Sarah was a normal young woman, with no known enemies or problems.

John was about to give up when he came across a single sentence in one of the reports. It said that Sarah had been a member of a secret society at her college.

John's interest was piqued. He had never heard of any secret societies at Sarah's college, but he decided to investigate further.

John went to the college library and began to research secret societies. He soon discovered that there was a long history of such societies on campus. Some of them were harmless, but others were involved in more sinister activities.

John was beginning to suspect that Sarah's disappearance might be connected to her involvement in a secret society. He decided to find out more about the society that she had been a member of.

John's investigation led him down a dark and dangerous path. He soon found himself embroiled in a world of black magic and ancient curses. But he was determined to find Sarah, no matter what the cost.
